

THE NORTHERN DALES

35 walks in the Derbyshire White Peak

INFORMATION

In 1951 the Peak District became the first National Park in the UK. It has everything a truly national landscape should – cultural integrity, geographical variety, treasured wildlife habitats and a diverse range of recreational opportunities. Fifty million people live less than an hour's drive away.

This much-loved upland marks transition in the landscape. Suddenly the placid woods and pastures of the Midlands are transformed into high rolling pastures and craggy dales. It is here that the North is born on the slopes of the emerging Pennines. This first volume in the White Peak Walks series covers the northern dales – from the tourist centre of Castleton, along the dales of the River Wye to the historic landscape of Stanton Moor and High Tor to the south.

The 35 routes described are half-day excursions, ranging between three and eight miles long, with scope to extend or combine, and offer a perfect introduction to this popular walking destination.
